Dear Professor Barth:

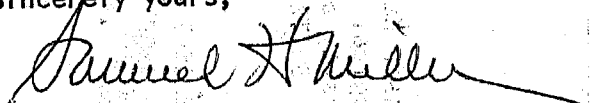

In behalf of the Faculty of Divinity at Harvard University, may I extend to you our very earnest invitation to visit us at your convenience during your American trip.

We would have been delighted to extend our invitation much earlier had we not been under the mistaken impression that you would not consider any appointments of any kind during your time in America. We are unanimous in our desire to welcome you to Harvard and it would give us immense pleasure to arrange your visit in a way which would please you.

Whether you would care to give a lecture or engage in an informal discussion with several of our theologians in the presence of our students, or just meet with the faculty for a more intimate gathering, we would leave with you. We would be glad to offer an honorarium of one hundred dollars for the lecture and if you happen to be coming from or going to Princeton, your expenses for that trip.

Many of my colleagues here remember with deep gratitude your warm hospitality and gracious openness during their visits to Basel. Professor Richard Niebuhr, Professor Amos Wilder, Mr. Milner Ball, and others have been greeted so generously that you will find a friendship and affection for you which your kindness has engendered.

Sincerely yours,

Samuel H. Miller
