CALL FOR GOD
by Karl Barth

1 pp

. Remarkable prophetic preaching by theology's living Olympian

Of the thousands who flocked to hear Karl Barth preach week after week, few knew of the hours he spent in the little chapel at Basel prison in Switzerland, preaching to prison convicts.

CALL FOR GOD is a collection of twelve of these sermons. Each is based on a short Scripture text and is accompanied by the prayers given before and after the sermon. They reveal Barth as a man full of love for his fellowmen as he brings to them the message of God with directness and with honesty. He never forgets or insults the dignity of the men as persons, and makes it very clear that he, no less than the convicts, is in need of God's love. These sermons speak compellingly to each one of us, captive as we are within our personal prisons of sin.

"Displays the grave, generous, and--often--genial humanity of 'anti-humanist' theology's living Olympian.... They might have been preached any time in the last two millennia.... Their dominant note--an unusual one in contemporary Christian literature--is of hope, of joy in the Lord, of an ardor that can assert, concerning faith, that 'no human being has ever prayed for this in vain.'"--The New Yorker

"Deserves the greatest attention possible, for the author meets the need of every man with compelling truth of evangelical faith which challenges and moves the reader, and will not let him go."--
