

PROFESSOR WILLIAM FULTON, M.A., B.Sc., D.D.,
Dean of the Faculty of Theology.

12 The College,

University of Glasgow.

10 Dec. 1931

Dear Professor Barth,

Thank you most cordially for your letter of 30th November. It deeply gratifies my Faculty that you have so honoured it in the dedicatory preface of your new book, and it is most thoughtful and courteous of you to send us these six copies. It gives us very great pleasure to receive them. I shall retain one for myself (and I shall read with genuine interest what you have written about Anselm's "proof"), and hand one over to the University Library. My colleagues Professors Stevenson, Milligan, and Main will be delighted to accept a copy each, while the remaining copy I shall give in your name to Professor A.B. Macaulay of Trinity College, Glasgow, who shares with me the Department of Systematic Theology, and who happens to be conducting this year - as I see you did last year - a "Seminar" at which the Cur Deus Homo is one of the special books under discussion.

I am very sorry indeed that I was unwell when you came to Glasgow to receive the Degree of D.D. But I heard how much my colleagues enjoyed meeting you. I had the pleasure of meeting Professor Brunner in the springtime.

The Barthian movement excites great interest among students of theology in Scotland. Some are for it, some are against it — on the theological side, but all are grateful to it for the quickening of the religious life which attends it.

Once more thanking you most cordially in the name of my Faculty for the great honour you have done us,

Yours, with kindest regards,

Yours sincerely,
Lillieum Fulton.
